Instead, God is something that we participate in. God is a verb, an action we bring to the world to make love, justice, mercy, joy and goodness known. Both of these models of God are rooted in the cross. In the first God enacts violence — or allows violence to happen to himself/his son — to appease his own wrath at humanity.

God Is a Verb | HuffPost

The title comes from Rabbi Cooper's concept that God should be seen not as a being but as a process, which he calls "God-ing." Of course, if I may geek with the grammar for a moment, "God-ing," as the name of a process, is not a verb but a noun. Granted, "God is a Participial Noun," doesn't have quite the same ring.

What If God Is A Verb? The other day, a former colleague asked if I believe in God. A few years ago, I might have had a quick answer. But, the older I get, the more I'm discovering that I don't know as much as I once thought. As a consequence, I'm finding, questions often invite more questions.

What If God Is A Verb? - Towards A Life Well Lived

God is a Verb is a collection of prayers that are written both poetically and with undeniable sincerity. Your immediate impression will be that the author has a truly HONEST relationship with God. The prayers are accentuated by black and white photography that doesn't intrude on the impact of the prayers themselves.

God, like the universe and reality itself, is participatory. There is no other choice, since existence is always on the move, which is why I'm fond of saying that God is a verb, not a noun. If the argument feels like it's getting opaque, I can offer an analogy that helped me when I first heard it. Imagine that your mind is like a river.
